Work, Communication & Interaction Style

Goal-Oriented.

You tend to be goal-oriented and intent on meeting or exceeding the expectations set for you. You have good follow-through on tasks when engaged with your work.

Very Motivated.

You are likely to have a very strong inner drive, which should see you viewed as driven and committed. Team members will generally describe you as motivated to achieve your goals.

Very Cooperative.

You are likely to be very cooperative and obliging, which suggests that you will value harmony in a group situation as opposed to advancing your own interests. You are likely to place a strong emphasis on treating others fairly and with respect, which should see you viewed as someone who is considerate, trustworthy, and perhaps even selfless. Cooperativeness is a trait well suited to service-oriented roles.

Temperament, Attitudes & Outlook

Very Competitive.

Compared to most people, you have a very strong drive to win. You are likely to be highly motivated by competition and will strive to meet and exceed external targets. In work settings, highly competitive individuals often excel in fields such as sales but are sometimes less well suited to roles like customer service.

Very Patient.

You are likely to be extremely tolerant of obstacles, setbacks, and others. Others may describe you as being calm and level-headed when under pressure, and unruffled by challenges and setbacks. You tend to have a relaxed outlook on life and come across as easy-going, but this may mean that others perceive you as not acting with urgency.

Problem Solving

When solving problems at work, you are likely to see the benefits of experimenting with new concepts and ideas, and may be less likely to rely on conventional, tried and true methods. Additionally, you are likely to flex between a methodical approach and an unstructured or flexible approach as required. When solving problems at work, you are likely to see the benefits of experimenting with new concepts and ideas, and may be less likely to rely on conventional, tried and true methods.

People can vary in the skills they rely on to solve problems. Some may be better at solving written and verbal problems, some may be better with numerical and number-based problems, while others are better at problems that are abstract, spatial or conceptual in nature. Knowing which of these areas is stronger for you can help you to apply your strengths when solving problems at work.

You have relatively equal strengths across the areas of numerical, verbal, abstract, conceptual and spatial problem solving. You are likely to be comfortable solving problems involving a variety of information types.

Common problem solving situations involving a variety of information types include:

- Drawing conclusions from written passages.
- Drawing conclusions from tables or lists of numbers.
- Conducting numerical analyses.
- Interpreting diagrammatic spatial information.

Strengths & Potential Challenges

Strengths

- You will generally have good follow-through and be attentive to goals.
- You are a highly motivated person with a strong inner drive.
- You are highly competitive by nature, with an innate desire to win, which will serve you well in roles where performance measurement is valued. You are comfortable taking risks when required.
- Expressing yourself directly should not be an issue for you.
- Ambiverts like you tend to be flexible enough to have potential suitability for a variety of roles, including those that emphasise social interactions and those that do not.
- You have a high level of curiosity and willingness to experiment. You will be comfortable in roles that evolve or change over time, or that involve many different elements. You may also exhibit creativity and "outside the box" thinking.
- Highly tolerant of frustrations and easy-going by nature, you are likely to bring a sense of calm and stability to collaborative tasks. You are likely to be more accepting of setbacks than most, and tend to be unruffled by the presence of stress or pressure.

Potential Challenges

- Your highly competitive nature may, at times, be seen by others as unfriendly. You should find ways to ensure you are competing as a team towards shared goals, as opposed to competing against your team mates.
- In certain situations, team members may not be universally comfortable with your frank and direct style of expression.
- Roles that are very narrowly defined or don't involve an opportunity for a learning trajectory may be less appealing for you.
- Given your highly tolerant and relaxed nature, you may find it uncomfortable if required to act with a great sense of urgency when the situation calls for it.

Development Suggestions

Work Habits

Achievement-oriented by nature, you will benefit from being challenged to achieve even greater effectiveness in a role and to look for opportunities to further refine your strengths and apply them for greater impact.

Your strong inner motivation and drive are likely to see you do well in a variety of tasks, even in tasks that you do not find intrinsically enjoyable. This strong inner drive can be best utilised in high impact activities where your motivation should see you achieving strong outcomes.

Interaction Style

It may be beneficial to consider when your direct approach may be useful and when it may be less so. While there is value in being assertive and leading the way, being too assertive can prevent others from sharing their opinions. Taking the time to consider the views and perspectives of others will not only help build relationships but often lead to better decision-making through collaboration.

Effective performance is often a combination of getting things done and interacting well with others. There are times when remaining focused on getting work done is the best approach and times when spending more time engaging with others is beneficial. It may benefit you to take a moment to consider the right balance for a particular job and where you may need to rebalance.

Problem Solving

You have similar levels of strength across written, numerical, abstract, conceptual and spatial problems. One way to develop your effectiveness at problem solving may be to consider work problems from each of these perspectives. A problem could be framed verbally, for example, by describing it using words and sentences. The same problem could also be described numerically using figures, graphs or charts. An abstract or spatial approach could involve using conceptual rules, categories or diagrams to solve the problem.

Temperament

While there is a time and a place for healthy competition, there is also a risk that being highly competitive may have a negative impact on developing good relationships with others. It may be beneficial for you to consider using your energy and enthusiasm for success to help others in their attainment of goals. This may help you foster valuable working relationships. You may also benefit from understanding that it's OK to lose and to fail - doing so can encourage growth, build resilience, and help shape future goals.

Given your highly tolerant and patient nature, you are likely to feel uncomfortable being rushed or pressured by others into taking immediate action. Your prioritisation of stable and calm relationships can mean you are unlikely to tell others when they have disappointed you. Understanding that your time, effort, and opinions are valuable may help increase your comfort with voicing your opinions when others don't meet your expectations.

Attitudes & Outlook

Being creative and intellectually curious is a great asset in many fields. But there are times you must also realise that there is no need to use a complex solution when a simple one will do. Making sure that your solutions can be delivered on by others is also important. Being able to come up with straightforward and practical solutions can be valuable, as in addition to resolving the challenge at hand, simple solutions are more easily replicated by others.

Workplace Stressors & Motivators

The following section relates common workplace situations to your behavioural preferences, to better understand how your potential may be best realised. Situations that may be comfortable or motivating for some people may be stressful or de-motivating for others. Below is a list of common workplace situations together with an indication of how each may impact you.
